Grief touches every layer of our being - emotional, cognitive, physical, and spiritual. In this talk, we'll explore a holistic approach to grief that embraces not only the pain of loss, but also the possibility of continued connection with those who have passed on. Central to this approach is a therapeutic process known as Induced After-Death Communication (IADC) - a modification of EMDR therapy that has helped many people experience profound healing through spontaneous, often life-changing encounters with departed loved ones.

We will also explore the nature of consciousness after death, drawing from spiritual insights, shared experiences, and emerging understandings of what may exist beyond the veil. What do our loved ones wish us to know? How do they perceive us from the other side? And how can opening to their presence bring peace, resolution, and even transformation?

This lecture invites the heart as much as the mind, offering a compassionate path through grief that affirms love never dies - it only changes form.

Audrey is a Licensed Marriage and Family Therapist. She was drawn to the field of psychotherapy through a deep calling to be of service by blending her spirituality, intuition, and life passions to support others on their healing journeys. Over time, this path has led her to specialize in Induced After Death Communication, or IADC, which is a gentle and powerful modification of EMDR, a well-established trauma therapy. IADC allows her to bridge clinical trauma work with spiritual healing, particularly in the areas of grief and connection beyond this life.

Audrey holds a Bachelor of Science from Cornell University and a Master of Science in Counseling from California State University, Fullerton.
