Encounters with apparitions that generally represent people who have died are experienced the world over and throughout history. But what do such experiences say about Consciousness and whether it can truly survive the death of the body? How are they different from other psychic experiences, especially hauntings and poltergeists? Are there other forms of encounters besides experiencing an apparition of the dead?

Psychical Researchers and Parapsychologists have been studying these experiences for over 140 years. For over 40 of those years, Loyd Auerbach has been studying and investigating apparitional experiences and has learned much about apparitions. In this presentation, he'll present some commonsense questions in relation to the evidence that led quickly to dismissal of much folklore about ghosts. From there, he'll briefly discuss theories and models of apparitions, why they may "stick around," and what makes a great evidential apparition case. He'll finish up with a discussion of three important cases in his own investigative and personal experience, cases that provide strong evidence for apparitions as interactive consciousnesses – without a physical body.
